II. Catalog Description

Prerequisites: ECON 101 Macroeconomics This course introduces the student to the basic concepts of international finance, international trade and economic development through the exploration of the interrelationship of national economies. The course provides an opportunity for students to apply theoretical knowledge to specific trade situations.

III. Statement of Course Need

- A. Due to an increase in global interdependence, it is crucial for our students to understand the basics of international trade and finance in order for them to fully understand the workings of our economy. Local businesses, whether multinational in size or small scale, are affected by the trade and finance practices of other countries. In addition to showing how our economy affects and is affected by decisions made abroad, this course will provide a very important opportunity for our students to apply the theoretical knowledge acquired in Macroeconomics and Microeconomics to specific trade situations. An international economics course will not only be an important boost to the economics curriculum, but will also strengthen the business program in general since it will expand the student's knowledge of how business is conducted globally. Increasingly, more and more international businesses are located in our area. These businesses will need workers who have a basic knowledge of the workings of the global economy.
